The Hero, The Princess, and the Ship

> The hero sits upon the scorched ground
> Drops his sword, his shield, his head.
 The battle is over, the enemy defeated,
> His quest is over, his destiny achieved.
 Diamond tears of relief flow,
> From orbs of sapphire blue;
 They fall to the ground, to his boots,
> They mix with the heathen blood on his magic blade.
 The princess watches from afar, hands folded, waiting.
> She gives the hero time to heal, as she contemplates her own fate.
 She has wrought a future that was never meant to be,
> A destiny that should not have unfolded.
 She has no choice, no say, no voice,
> She must send her hero on a final quest.
 He must sail on a ship of timeless blue,
> Back to a lost childhood of green.
 The ship awaits in the hero's pack.
> A blue orb of music, a bearer of power,
 A minstrel of destiny, a bard of fate.
> It knows no pain, no fear no suffering;
 It is a mere vessel for the hope of many;
> A tool for bearing the carrier through the rapids
 And inconsistencies of time;
> The infinite river.
